

User-Centred Digital Learning at Western Libraries

Advancing Teaching, Learning, Research and Scholarship Through Innovations in Technology

Libraries have long been innovative, creative institutions within their communities. Western Libraries and its staff are no different, long committed to providing equitable access to and effective use of information resources, and instructional technology in order to ensure successful lifelong learning.

Digital technologies have transformed university life in recent years and will continue to change dramatically the way in which Western Libraries delivers its resources to students, researchers, faculty, alumni and community members, across campus and beyond.

Investing in Digital Innovation

As we educate the next generation of global leaders, it is crucial we continue to be innovative and proactive in the integration of future technological developments, which will enhance teaching and learning, and research and scholarship.

To that end, Western Libraries is committed to raising $1.5 million to establish a Highest Priorities Fund for technology renewal and conversion.

Digital innovation across Western Libraries will:

- Increase the speed of research
- Increase off-site access to information resources
- Stimulate creativity in learning and teaching
- Ensure full access to required technology to support learning
- Support and enhance collaborative, interdisciplinary and global scholarship
- Enhance Western's international profile through electronic access of selected collections and databases

MAKE A DIFFERENCE
